About National Seminar

The National Seminar on "Navigating Teaching in the Age of AI" is a forward-looking academic initiative designed to engage educators, researchers, and policy-makers in meaningful discourse on the transformative impact of artificial intelligence on education. As AI technologies increasingly influence curriculum design, instructional delivery, and assessment methodologies, this seminar seeks to examine both the opportunities and ethical considerations they present.

Through a curated blend of keynote addresses, scholarly paper presentations, and interactive workshops, the seminar will explore how educators can thoughtfully integrate AI tools into their practice while maintaining the core human values of teaching and learning.

By fostering critical reflection and professional exchange, the seminar aims to equip participants with practical insights, policy perspectives, and innovative strategies to navigate this rapidly evolving educational landscape. Ultimately, it envisions AI not as a replacement for educators, but as a powerful ally in enriching the teaching-learning experience and preparing institutions for a technologically augmented future.
